distinctly a business convention and I want to insist that all the delegates attend every session, as their advice and counsel will be needed. Our association is gaining ground rapidly, not only in membership, but in acomplishments as well. If the present administrative officers of the organization have succeeded in accomplishing more good than their predecessors it is because we have profited by their knowledge and experience and see more plainly the benefits to be derived and the necessity for pushing forward and battling the cvils that threaten our business."

Benefits of Organization. Continuing, the president called attention to the benefits that had resulted from the organization, stating particularly that the manufacturers and jobbers are acceding to the wishes of the retailers in many matters of business. He called attention to the implement insurance exchange which had sprung from the association and urged all the members to give it their best support. The president also said that the members once of the association should protect the interests of their customers by adopting resolutions discouraging the formation of pools for the arbitrary advancement of prices on
